THE INDIANS STAMPEDED

Holbrook, Ariz., Sept. 14 .- On Fri day evening seventeen Moqui Indian children in charge of an instructor took the train for Riverside, Calif., where they will attend the Indian school. These children were held at school. These children were held at Holbrook for several days to get them used to the trains, a sight they had never seen before, nor ever believed in. The instructor was fairly successful as a close herder until a train whistled, when there was a stampede, and barefooted Moqui kids were headed up every street. What could not be roped were caught with dogs and brought back, to have the same performance take place on the arrival of the next train. Gradually their fear wore off, and when the day for leaving arrived the children had become so accustomed to the trains that but few had to be blindfolded and backed onto the cars. At Riverand backed onto the cars. At River-side the little Moquis will learn to read from the white man's book, take a bath every year or two, wear the white man's name and the white man's pants, and do all other acts and things that a white child is supposed to do.
